

SIFT Feature Extraction for Flower Image Classification

Training KNN classifier using SIFT descriptors as features and class labels as targets gives us low accuracy (44.91%)

The low obtained accuracy is mainly due to the fact that SIFT captures local texture information, not holistic image characteristics. Since each descriptor was treated as an individual sample, the classifier could not learn global representations of flowers. Similar local features across different flower species caused confusion, leading to limited classification performance.